Accident of Small Lot.

ARCHITECT HITS ON A PLAN

Crude Structure in New York Which Passed the Bullding Department Becomes Pioneer of Big Office Building-Interesting Incident Dating Back to Year of 1888.

In a recent article the Iron Age has made it plain that the modern skyscraper was evolved by accident, in which the personal element largely predominated. A man had purchased a double plot of land in Broadway, with the understanding that he would later be able to purchase an adjoining lot to square his own property. As his frontage was only twenty-one and one-half feet wide and included more than half the length of his lot the necessity of adding the adjoining also his despair on finding that he had purchased under a misapprehension and frontage. Under the laws of the city the erection of a building of contemporary type of architecture would have nearly covered his Broadway lot with masonry, leaving BRICK; AUTOMOBILES OR HORSES, hardly more than a ten-foot passageway.

The man carried his perplexity to an architect, who put his mind to a study of the building regulations. He discovered that they, although specifying the if you have the "Acme" do your window, office, and house cleaning. ACME WINDOW CLEANING CO., 921 G st. nw.

tions right up to the roof and doing away with thick walled superstructure altogether. The weight of the floors and walls could be carried and transmitted to the foundation by a framework of metallic posts and beams. The plan was so new that although it did not conflict with existing building laws, neither was immediately authorized. The plans had to be taken up by the

The possibility that the build-ATLANTIC CITY, 17:00, "9:00, 111:00 a. m., 11:00, ing would blow over, and that he would find himself responsible for the resulting damage, weighed on his spirits and required much soothing from the architect. It was only when the architect agreed to establish his own offices in the top of

LOUIS, AND LOUISVILLE, narrow plot of land on Broadway with a frontage too small to build upon, the skyscraper, however, would undoubtedly by this time have dominated New York. The growth of population and business was bound to make more and more land too valuable to build upon unless the base of the building, so to speak, could be measured along the perpendicular. The necessity of making several office rooms and apartments rent where only one rented before was inevitable, and Chicago had already shown the possibility.
